INCREASING SPECIE CURRENCY.

Action of Russia Creates Surprise Among Financiers—She Will Coin During the Coming Year Gold to the Value of $77,000,000 and Silver to the Value of Over $19,000,000.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—The Associated Press cablegram of Wednesday announcing the intention of the Russian government to coin next year $100,000,000 roubles in gold and 25,000,000 in silver in addition to the subsidary coinage, has created considerable interest among financiers because of the evident purpose exhibited on the part of Russia of increasing her specie currency. While Russia holds in coin and bullion between $400,000,000 and $500,000,000 of gold, she has recently coined very little of this, the total for the past four years being $7,207,314. For the same period her silver coinage amounted to $10,620,442.

In 1894 the gold coinage amounted to $2,225,231, and the silver coinage to $2,515,182. Reducing the figures for 1896 to American money, it is now proposed to coin $77,000,000 in gold and $19,250,000 in silver in addition to the small coins. It is thought in some quarters that the general purpose of this increase is to begin preparation for the redemption of the Russian paper, which is the principal currency in circulation in the empire. Last August the Imperial bank held $829,900,000 in paper.

It is also considered probable that in increasing her silver coinage as she is doing, Russia is preparing to extend her trade into the silver-using countries of the Orient, especially China, Japan and Korea. To put this purpose into execution it will be necessary for Russia to go outside of her own country to secure silver.

OFFICIAL REPORT

On the Late Disturbances In Turkey.

A SENTIMENT OF GENEROSITY

Inspires His Imperial Majesty (So the Report Says) to Nourish and Shelter the Sufferers at the Expense of the State—But Reports From Other Sources Tell a Different Story.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—The Turkish legation here received from the sublime porte the following telegram:

His imperial majesty, the sultan, in his high sentiments of generosity, issued orders to the effect that all those of his Mussulman and Christian subjects who sustained any damages during the recent riots in certain provinces of the empire should be nourished and sheltered at the expense of the state. The vali of the provinces have been informed of the above.

The authorities of Mammouret-El-Aziz state that a conflict took place at Kersik between Mussulmans and Armenians, in consequence of the latter firing two shots from revolvers. The army of rioters of Arabgair set fire to a mosque and to the bazaar. The fire assumed large proportions, and many of the houses of Mussulmans and Christians were burned. Estimates of the Killed.

A dispatch from Constantinople says that a careful estimate makes the total number of persons killed outright in the massacres 15,000, and it is probable 30,000 will die of starvation during the coming semester. It can not be realized in Europe how awful is the situation.

A member of the diplomatic corps remarked that wherever foreign ambassadors had established consuls the allegation that the Armenias had commenced the disorders had been disproven. Much can be done to stop the massacres, and it is believed that the sultan now recognizes that he must do something.

The French squadron is expected at Beyrout in the near future.

Armenians Blamed.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 15.—Official dispatches published here from the disturbed districts say that the Armenians in every case have been the aggressors and attacked the Mussulmans, who were obliged to defend themselves against the ferocity of the Armenians. At Arabkir on Oct. 26-27, the official reports add, the Armenians set fire to a mosque and bazaar with bombs, and massacred a number of Mohammedans. The authorities, it is claimed, afterward discovered 40 bombs which the Armenians intended to explode in the local barracks and government offices.

FREE SILVER DEMOCRATS.

Senator Harris Urges a Plain Declaration In Favor of Free Coinage.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—Senator Harris, chairman of the executive committee of six appointed at the Washington conference of last August to organize for the campaign of 1896 the free silver Democrats of the country, has sent a letter to his colleagues, the chief feature of which is the following:

In the light of recent election results there is in my opinion no hope of Democratic success in 1896 unless we can succeed in so organizing the bimetallic Democrats as to secure in the national convention a plain, distinct and unmistakable declaration in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of both silver and gold without regard to the financial politics of any country, and therefore it appears to me that we should redouble our efforts to secure such organization.

Interviewed In Prison by the Editor of The Daily Vorwaerts.

MILWAUKEE, Nov. 15.—Mr. Victor L. Berger, editor of The Daily Vorwaerts, went to Woodstock, Ills., to interview the imprisoned labor leader, Eugene V. Debs. Debs said in substance:

The time of strikes is past; laboring men must strike at the ballot box. A laboring man who votes for any of the old parties is a slave who is voting the ticket of his master and helping his own chain. I am for silver, but the coinage of silver is no real issue, because it would change nothing in this damnable industrial system that makes slaves of the great majority of the people. Only the complete overthrow of the present wage slavery and the establishment of the co-operative commonwealth will afford a thorough and permanent help.

IN SOCIAL SESSION

THE MARION ELKS FORMALLY OPEN THEIR NEW HALL.

Their Handsome Quarters the Scene of a Brilliant Assemblage Thursday Evening—Long Into the Night Do the Pleasures of the Propitious Occasion Extend.

The long anticipated opening of the social season within the ranks of the Elks is a thing of the past, and Marion lodge, No. 32, has scored a marked success from an informal social standpoint, the affair of Tuesday evening being everything that could have been wished for in that line.

At 7 o'clock there was a business session of the lodge, and at promptly 8 o'clock the doors were thrown open and the guests of the Elks began to arrive. The rain fell without in a steady drizzle, but for an hour carriage after carriage drew up to the stairs entrance of the hall with the guests who had turned out to join the Elks in felicitous social enjoyment of their new home.

The arrangement for receiving the guests was nicely managed. The committees had left no part of their work unaccomplished. The decorations were highly complimented. In every nook and corner of the halls were placed banks of palms, garlands of evergreen were suspended from the chandeliers and the floral decorations were completed by potted plants placed on the stands and tables about the main lodge room.

It was nearly 9 o'clock before the last of the guests were seated about small tables, where cards and various kinds of games were indulged in until Chairman J. E. Crow requested the guests to form a circle, where they joined hands and sang "Auld Lang Syne." While the company, numbering about three hundred, still remained seated at the tables a musical program was rendered. The orchestra, under the direction of Prof. Becker, rendered the principal portion of the musical program, and without any exceptions the Professor now has one of the very best orchestras ever afforded Marion. Their music was the delight of the evening.

Master Howard Stoll received an ovation in way of applause after his recitation. This was Master Howard's first appearance before the Elks and he pleased immensely.

Miss Margerie Stowe in a violin solo won much applause, as did also Miss Torence, who recited "Mary's Singing Lesson," and was obliged to respond to an encore.

One of the most delightful features of the evening was the vocal solo rendered by Mrs. Geo. B. Donavin, of Delaware. Mrs. Donavin has a sweet voice, clear and distinct and sang with much feeling. She completed her solo amid a storm of merited applause.

The Twilight Mandolin club made its first public appearance and scored a success. The young ladies are under the direction of Prof. Becker, and by their appearance Thursday night made themselves a prominent factor in the musical organizations of Marion.

During the time that the program was being rendered refreshments were being served to the guests in their places about the room, and M. E Meiley had looked well to this feature of the evening.

After the refreshments came speeches. B. G. Young was called upon and responded in a few words. W. E. Scofield was next called to his feet and made a very happy hit in his remarks to the Elks and their ladies. J. F. McNeal, as a guest, was called upon and made a very pleasant response.

Then dancing followed and until after the midnight hour the dancers kept the floor, only stopping at 11 o'clock to drink a toast to the absent members, a custom ever observed by the Elks.

WALDO STRIKES WATER

And There Is More Rejoicing Over It Than You'd Imagine.

WALDO, November 15.—At last we have water. On Tuesday our well drillers struck a vein of water and we now have a bountiful supply. They drilled down 79 feet, 3 inches. The members of our village council deserve the thanks not only of our citizens but of those passing through here for their persistency in the face of opposition in finally getting such a good supply of water. The drillers have been at it over three months.

It is reported that a new hardware store will open in the Groll building next month, occupying one-half of the building. Who the party is we are not able to state, but we have the assurance that he is an experienced man in the business. Waldo needs a hardware store badly.

A great many young people were entertained by Miss May Selanders last evening at the home of her parents. All report an enjoyable time. They say it was a play party; will someone tell us "what is it."

Ding. Porterfield left last week for Virginia, on a hunting trip, to be gone several weeks.

Our quail hunters are not meeting with much success in this vicinity, but our druggist and a party of friends went away last Monday and returned Wednesday with from 22 to 27 birds each.

Hog cholera is quite severe around Waldo.

A BIG FOUR THEFT

RUN DOWN BY THAT COMPANY'S OWN DETECTIVE.

Barney Narrance Is Found in the Act of Carrying Away Stolen Goods—He Is Arrested and Tells a Doubtful Story of Hard Luck.

A case of railroad robbery came before 'Squire McKinley this morning that has a hard-luck story connected with it. Detective E. C. Jones, of the Big Four Railway company, Thursday night arrested Barney Narrance, of Galion, one mile east of this city, for stealing merchandise. Five cases of boots and shoes and merchandise were stolen from a Big Four train. The detective came here Thursday evening and went to the locality where the goods were thrown from the train, and found Narrance in the act of shouldering a box and carrying it away.

He was arrested and taken to the county jail, where he was kept until this morning, when he was taken before 'Squire McKinley, as acting mayor, and when arraigned told his story. Narrance claimed that he was a barber and came here in hard luck.

Thursday afternoon he was accosted by a fellow who asked him for a chew of tobacco. Narrance let him have it, and in the conversation said that his feet were cold. The stranger asked him if he would not like to have a pair of shoes. He said he would and the stranger told Narrance to follow him. He did so and east of here they came on to five boxes. Narrance was told to pick one of them up and carry it to an empty house near by and he would be given a pair of shoes. He did so and while having the box on his shoulder was arrested by the officer.

'Squire McKinley bound him over to court and in the absence of a bondsman he was placed in the county jail.

It is claimed that there is a gang of railroad thieves working a graft of this kind over the country. Several of them get on a train and break into a car, while accomplices go out and get the booty and then it is given to a fence for disposal. The Big Four has been worked in this way and Marion has been one of the operating points. The detective was onto this fact and had no trouble in working up a clue.

He met in the street one day an old German who was staggering along under the load of a great pile of cases. Field stopped him, and the German said that he had in the cases a complete collection of the butterflies of North America. The collection was the work of a lifetime, but he had lost his work and had to sell it to pay his rent. Field bought it on the spot for $50 and lugged it home, promising himself to give it to a museum, but he never did. As a collector of books Mr. Field was more discriminating, and he has left a noteworthy library of rare and rare editions.

Last spring Mr. Field bought a fine old mansion in Buena Park, one of the suburbs of Chicago. This house is filled with cabinets loaded down with curios. He had no particular preference, unless it was for books, but collected things impartially and indiscriminately. Two special treasures he had, and they hung side by side in whatever home he had. One was an ax which had been used by Gladstone. Field went to see the famous Englishman at his place at Hawarden, and Gladstone gave him an ax with which he had just finished cutting down a tree. The other treasure was a pair of shears which Mr. Charles A. Dana had used in his office and given to Mr. Field at the Chicago man's request.

Mr. Field used to say of himself that he was an aristocrat, but he was an aristocrat of a very democratic sort. Everybody in his neighborhood knew him, and everybody liked him. A visitor to his home in Buena Park met all the people of the neighborhood. If it was in the summer, the visitor was sure to find the lawn and porch crowded with callers and Field entertaining them all. He was remarkably witty and an inimitable story teller, abounding with incessant fun. He always responded to a call to help entertain people, and his neighbors always called on him. He had a way of coming home and saying to his wife, "What you going to have for dinner?" If it was something he didn't like particularly, he would go to the first neighbor's and ask there. When he found what he wanted, he would stay, and no man was ever more welcome. He was gentle and cheery and everybody loved him. Children swarmed about him, and he told them wonderful stories, which he invented on the spot. Nine children were born to him, of whom five are still living.

One incident will illustrate his propensity for practical jokes: One afternoon last spring he took to each of his neighbors in Buena Park a little green slip of a plant to which he gave a wonderful Latin name, and told him it bore a beautiful flower. With his own hands he planted the slips in the gardens of his friends. It didn't take long to develop that the beautiful plants were Canada thistles, and there were many good natured railings at Field.

He was pestered so much a few years ago for biographical data that he got up a circular of information about himself and sent it to all his friends. It was an astonishing self exposition. He told his age, height, weight, color of hair and eyes, size of head, hands and feet. Said he loved women and children, believed in religion, and was a Christian. Admitted that he didn't dress well and said he didn't like to. Told the things that he liked and those that he didn't. Said he used perfumery in spite of the fact that it was bad taste, and declared that he had written only one novel. That one he had rewritten each year for seven years, and meant to keep at it until he had made it satisfactory to himself. It said that he didn't drink, and smoked only in moderation. It didn't admit, what was the fact, that he was a very hard worker.

One of Field's amusements was entertaining at the Chicago Union League club any persons of literary reputation who might be visiting Chicago. Usually he would invite some of the commercial lights of Chicago to dine with them and not infrequently he would poke fun at them without much mercy. The last time he was in London he was at a dinner where he was placed next to Mrs. Humphry Ward at table. She looked him over critically and devoted her conversation entirely to others until she noticed the attention that others were paying to Field. Then she turned to him and said:

"Tell me about the habits and characteristics of your people."

Field looked at her with extraordinary seriousness in his solemn face and replied:

"When they caught me, I was up a tree."

Then he went on to tell the whole table about his friend Red Leary, the murderer, and about burglars and thieves and highwaymen in a way which amazed them, and many of the guests sought him out afterward to know if he told the truth.

The work of filling his column of Sharps and Flats so wore on him that he was struggling to get out of it. He went about a good deal as a public entertainer, reading selections from his own work. In this way he added a great deal to his income from his books, which had grown to be about $5,000 a year. His "lectures," as they were called improperly, were especially successful with children, to whom he would read the "Lullaby Lady In Hush-a-by-Street," and similar poems. The two poems with which he met with the greatest success were "Wynken, Blynken and Nod" and "Father's Way."

Mr. Field was tall and thin, blond and boyish. He was smooth shaven, and there was a suspiciously solemn expression about his face.

It is a pathetic coincidence that the announcement of Field's death and of a new book of his poems should come together. The last stanza of the epilogue of the "Echoes From the Sabine Farm" is:

Or if we part to meet no more
This side the misty Stygian river,
Be sure of this: on yonder shore
Sweet cheer awaits us such as we—
A Sabine pagan's heaven. O friend—
And fellowship that knows no end.

SOMETHING ON HIS MIND.

But What It Was He Did Not Make Plain to Her Until Later On.

There was evidently something on his mind, for he did not even notice the coffee was cold and that the cook and housemaid were quarreling audibly in the kitchen.

"It can't be the dressmaker's bill," mused his wife, "for she has only sent it to me twice as yet: it will only go to his office as a last resort. Anyhow, if it is anything unpleasant, he'll speak of it soon enough," and she poured her husband another cup of tea, which was hot.

At last he spoke: "By the way, my dear, it seems rather dreary for you alone all day in this large house. How should you like a visitor this winter?"

"What ever put such an idea into your head, Henry Marshmallow? I'm sure I have no time to spend in inventing amusements for a girl who would make me a stranger in my own parlor. To be sure Amy is engaged, and by coughing every time I come into the room—but then I've made all those lovely new sofa pillows. I can't have them ruined. Then there is Effie—look here, Henry, had you any one in particular in your mind?"

Mr. Marshmallow looked alarmed. "Not at all, I assure you—that is, I mean—er—the lady I had in mind is quite middle aged—elderly, in fact."

Mrs. Marshmallow stiffened. "It is quite impossible. In the first place, the guest chamber is not fit to be seen, and anyhow I don't want anybody to sleep in that lovely bed. It would spoil the set of pillows. Besides I shall be too busy to take anybody around this winter; the house takes up all my time."

"But what I was thinking was that you might be glad of a little help in your housekeeping."

"That is just where you are mistaken, Henry Marshmallow. When I want any interference in my domestic affairs, I'll let you know. Oh, yes, I know just how much she would enjoy putting a finger into my pie."

"You quite surprise me, dear; still, you must know her better than I."

"That is the first time since our marriage that you have shown any appreciation of my judgment. I'm glad you've learned its value at last."

"Oh, well, I only thought to give you pleasure."

"Great pleasure, I'm sure. I only hope you haven't already invited her. If you have, I give you fair warning I shall just expose myself to smallpox and have the house quarantined, so she can't come."

"Of course I haven't asked her. I thought I'd just suggest it, lest you didn't like to, and you'd enjoy asking her yourself."

"And enjoy hearing all winter how she brought up 15 children without ever a sealskin jacket or a pair of bloomers."

"Really, I was not aware that your"—

"Of course you were not aware of anything. Well, I'll not have any company this winter, that's flat. I'm going to fit up the guest chamber as a private gymnasium, and I'll have no room for any one."

"Very well, then, that settles it; we'll say no more about it. I wasn't overanxious for it myself." He was struggling into his coat as he spoke. "I only thought you would like a nice long visit from your mother, so I"—

Then It Becomes Literal.

"There is a good deal of what one might call the poetic quality in slang," said Professor Trivvles.

STORIES OF THE DAY.

Interesting Episode In the Lobby of a New York Theater.

There were at least six persons who were witnesses of this scene in the lobby of the Garrick theater, New York, the other night. Two women entered the lobby at about 9 o'clock, when the first act of "Leonardo" was almost over. Both seemed excited and very nervous. One of the women was crying. They spoke to the doorkeeper and asked him to send word to a woman who was sitting in one of the stage boxes.

"Tell her to come outside for a moment," cried the elder woman. "We must see her. It's a matter of great importance." Presently the woman came out. She was fashionably dressed and rather pretty. She looked none too pleased at the interruption, however. The elder woman grasped her by the hand. "My dear child," she said, "I have terrible news for you. Your dear mother dropped dead about half an hour ago."

The woman gave a little shriek and looked for a moment as if she were going to faint. The younger woman handed her her smelling salts.

"My God! How terrible! How awful!" cried the woman. "Poor mother!"

One of her companions had already gone to call a cab. Suddenly the woman drew herself together, took a long sniff at the salts and exclaimed:

"Well, I'm here now, so I might as well see the performance out. It won't make any difference to mother."

The other two women fell back in amazement. The doorkeeper stood there open mouthed. In vain the women explained to her that there was no one with the body.

"I'm going to sit out this performance," repeated the woman firmly as she wiped her eyes and re-entered the theater.

The two women drove away alone. In half an hour they returned in a more distracted state than ever. Again the woman was summoned from her box. This time, however, her temper was aroused.

"I wish you would leave me alone," she exclaimed. "What is the matter now?"

The women explained that they had been hunting for her brother, but could not find him. Again they begged her to go home. "Now, look here, you just leave my brother alone. He's up at 'His Excellency,' and he doesn't want to be disturbed any more than I do. It's been very kind of you to take all this trouble, but I wish all the same, you had left me alone. I've got to get back to my box now. Good night."—New York Evening Sun.

Daring Steamboating.

The development of the great northwest is sometimes attended with perilous incidents. The Rainy Lake goldfields in northern Minnesota lie some distance from railways and can be reached only via a chain of lakes and rivers, to navigate which little steamboats are used. In running a steamboat from Rainy Lake river to Rainy Lake recently a steamboat was compelled to plunge over falls ten feet high.

At the last moment the engineer deemed prudence the better part of valor and decided not to make the perilous trip. So the captain fixed a wire running from the pilothouse to the engine room and attached it to the steam throttle so he could shut off steam when desired. Then, casting off lines and pulling the throttle wide open, with a full head of steam on, he steered into the current, leading to the rapids above the falls, which is confined in a narrow gorge, and where the water runs with a fearful current.

With the force of the current and the full head of steam the steamboat shot ahead with the speed of an arrow, and as the brow of the falls was reached the captain pulled the wire to shut off steam; the steamboat shot out of the water full length, exposing the whole boat bottom, keel, wheel and rudder, and then dropped into the boiling, swirling water below the falls. Then came work for the captain. The mad, tumultuous waters were of course unknown to him. Hidden rocks were ready to deal destruction to the boat. The current was swift, strong and tortuous, but luckily he guided her safely into quiet water, when steam was applied and she was soon at the landing below the falls.—Northwest Magazine.

Out of the Mouths of Babes.

The spark of genius shows itself early in life, and my friend in Woburn has a little girl just beginning her career at school who already exhibits sublime flights of intellect. One blustering, lowering day last week the teacher asked the school children to write their impressions of the weather. The little tots struggled for some time with their imaginations, and in many cases the result was nil.

But not so with my friend's bright little daughter. She sat near the window and watched the falling leaves flashed hither and thither by the fickle autumnal breezes. Then she was seen to write something upon her slate, and when the teacher approached the child triumphantly exhibited this brief, but wise composition:

"The world is full of wind."—Boston Globe.

Sweet Praise.

W. H. MacDonald, the baritone of the Bostonians, tells a good story on himself. Last summer while rusticating in the pine woods of Maine it became noised about the village that he was one of the Bostonians and he was asked to appear at a local concert. He sang and was received with thunderous applause. As he was leaving the hall an old man rushed up to him, shook him by the hand, and exclaimed:

"Mister, I've seen a good many o' them singers down to Boston, but I'll be dinged if you ain't got the darndest sweetest lung I ever heered in all my life."—San Francisco Post.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

Fat Baby Penguin's Careworn Parents Grow Thin With Fishing For His Food.

You will notice that this baby is very fat and looks as if he might be extremely good for eating, but if you could see Father and Mother Penguin just now you would find them uncommonly thin. The care of the baby has so worn upon their minds, and the trouble of finding enough fish for three to eat, that all superfluous flesh for the time has vanished.

Baby Penguin has a curious nest. The mother rocks the egg away softly and safely among her warm feathers and even moves slowly and with great gravity over the cliffs, carrying the egg, while Father Penguin goes fishing. Mother Penguin looks as fat during this time as the baby does now, but when the egg is hatched she goes fishing, too, and soon grows as thin as Father Penguin himself.

You notice the funny little wings just beginning to start on baby's shoulders. Well, Mother and Father Penguin have longer ones, but they are still more like fins than wings. Nearly all the time is spent in the water, and fins are more useful to them than wings. When on the land, these little half wings are used as legs, and the birds often are mistaken for quadrupeds as they run over the ground. They do not seem to be troubled with insomnia. When asleep, they can be kicked several feet and never even wake up.

The king penguins have regular towns, where every inch of ground is measured off in squares for nests. The young birds are arranged in a certain locality, molting birds in another, the sitting hens in another and the other birds apart from these.

In the Falkland islands and in Patagonia these birds abound. They are also very numerous in certain islands of the south Pacific ocean. On some of them 30,000 or 40,000 are constantly landing or going to sea.—Young Idea.

The Dog Kindergarten.

Midget and Fidget and Dumpy and Dun
Were four little four legged budgets of fun.
They had a red house at the foot of the lawn,
Where they slept together from dark to dawn.
From dawn to dark they romped and ran.
We called and tumbled till school began.
Then Floss, their mother, set all in a row,
To teach them the things that other dogs know,
And cuffed their ears if they spoke too low.

"First lesson in bark! Attend now, bark!
Bow-wow! So, speak it up loud as I!"
"Yip, yap, yip, bow-bow, ki yi!"
"Yip-yip!" said Midget; "Yap yap!" said Fidget;
"Bow-bow!" said Dumpy; "Ki-ki!" said Dun
To the pupils this was lively fun.
And the second lesson was just begun
When they saw a pussy cat out by the well.
Heels over head they went pell-mell,
And the school broke up with a four pup yell.

"There are some things," Mother Flossie thought,
"That little dogs know without being taught!"
But pussy was rather too spry to be caught.

Lizzie's Long Sleep.

The clock struck 12, and Lizzie woke with a start.

She sat up in bed and looked at the little clock standing on the dressing table. There must be some mistake. She could not have slept till so late an hour.

No; there was no mistake. It was 12 o'clock.

"Oh, what shall I do?" said Lizzie. "My cousins will think I am a lie-abed."

She slipped out of bed and began to dress herself as fast as she could, saying to herself:

"Why did not some one wake me?"

Lizzie had come to stay with her aunt and cousins and had come a very long journey and had been so long on the way that she did not get to her aunt's till very late at night, and then she was so tired that she fell fast asleep the moment she put her head on the pillow.

And her aunt had said that she must not be waked in the morning, but must sleep as long as she could and get quite rested.

When Lizzie was dressed, she went to her aunt in the dining room, where, to her surprise, she found breakfast waiting for her. "Oh, aunt," she said, "I am so ashamed of myself! I did not wake at the right time."

Her aunt kissed her.

"Don't trouble over it, Lizzie," she said. "You were tired and wanted rest, and I would not have you waked. You will be ready now to play with your cousins without feeling tired, and you shall get up when they do tomorrow, for I know that you are an early bird."

Every Emotional Experience Produces Characteristic Chemical Results.

A scientific man of Philadelphia has been making a study of the chemical products of various emotions, and, according to The Press of that city, not the least startling of his conclusions is the one reached through experiments to demonstrate that scarlet is not the distinctive color of sin, and that the Bible expression, "though your sins be as scarlet," is simply a rhetorical exaggeration. Dr. Gates has found in his study of the brain that each definite emotion produces chemical products in the secretions and excretions which are characteristic of those emotions.

The evil emotions produce, for example, a poisonous product, while happy emotions produce life promoting compounds. In other words, every emotional experience creates brain structure, the refunctioning of which reproduces its characteristic good and bad chemical products. The perspiration, for example, he found to contain different volatile organic compounds under the influence of different emotions. These products may be detected by chemical analysis in the perspiration of an individual. Dr. Gates has discovered more than 40 of the bad and as many of the good.

Of the chemical products which Dr. Gates has found that of guilt is the worst. If a small quantity of the perspiration of a person suffering from conscious guilt be placed in a glass tube and exposed to contact with selenic acid, it will turn pink. No other poison similarly generated exhibits the same phenomenon. Accordingly pink is apparently the characteristic color of sin, not scarlet.

An Imperial Throne In This Country.

It is recorded of Napoleon III that he once remarked that a throne was nothing but a pile of lumber with gorgeous trappings. But whatever Napoleon thought of thrones it is not hard to believe that he was fond of them. He had seven scattered around in different parts of France, so that wherever he was he would be within easy reach of one. The New York Herald tells that one of these seven thrones, or, to be more correct, the chair which formed the greater part of the throne, is now in this country and is to go into a museum in San Francisco.

As far as can be learned it was the chair which graced the Chateau St. Cloud, or that was at Compiegne. As the story runs, it was taken away during the Franco-Prussian war, just before the appearance of the Prussians, by a patriotic Frenchman, who was determined that the chair in which the emperor had seated himself should never be desecrated by falling into the hands of the foes of France. To insure its safety he stored it away in the cellar of his house. After his death, a few years ago, his relatives found the chair and sold it to a dealer in antiquities.

It stands 3½ feet high, the framework being of carved oak, with heavy gilding and is upholstered in rich crimson velvet, handsomely embroidered with heavy gold thread, with a big N standing out in prominent relief.

Traveler's Outfit In 1780.

A Traveler's Guide, dated 1780, contains advice as to the luggage which should be taken. "Take," says The Guide, "two suits of clothes, one coffee colored and one blue; a chest flannel, a pair of leather breeches, sleeping suit, 3 pairs of stockings, 2 pairs of gloves, 2 wigs, 1 hair bag (?), 2 caps, 2 hats, 2 pairs of shoes, 1 pair of slippers, 6 'undershirts,' 3 'overshirts,' 6 neckties, 6 collars, 6 handkerchiefs, 4 pairs of cuffs, 3 cravats, 2 pairs of cotton hose, 2 pairs of socks." But this is not all, as is shown by the following items: "Take a Bible, a book of sermons, a Traveler's Guide, 2 albums, a diary, a quire of white paper, quills and ink; an almanac, a mirror, a silver watch, a silver snuffbox, a silver spoon, a pair of silver shoe buckles, a silver tiepin, 3 silver seals, a gold seal ring, a knife and fork with silver handles, a sewing case, an opera glass, a compass, a wax light and a tinder box, a toothbrush, a silver toothpick, a sword, a silver mounted cane, a padlock with which to fasten your door at night inside, a clothesbrush, a box of medicine."

The Number Nine.

It is by nines that eastern presents are given when made on a scale of great magnificence. "To the nines," expresses a state of perfection, as "dressed up to the nines." Chaucer, Heywood and Shakespeare speak of a nine days' wonder; a cat has nine lives; a tailor is a ninth part of a man; Shakespeare makes Hotspur cavil on the ninth part of a hair. It was a number of magical power dear to witches, as we read in "Macbeth;" Shakespeare, again, has the "Nine Sibyls of old Rome." We have the games of nine men's morris and ninepins; the butcher bird is called the nine killer, from its habit of impaling nine of the animals on which it feeds before it begins its meal; the nine of diamonds is called the curse of Scotland; there were nine muses, nine planets, nine orders of angels, nine worthies. Every ninth wave, as Tennyson sings, is said to be the largest, and last, not least, possession is nine points of the law.

A "RUN-DOWN," "tired out" woman who complains of backache, headache, loss of appetite, extreme lassitude and that "don't care" feeling is pretty sure to be suffering from "Female Weakness," some irregularity or derangement of the special functions of womanhood. Very often womb troubles set the nerves wild with affright and as a result the woman suffers from sleeplessness, nervousness, nervous prostration, faintness and dizziness, irritability and indigestion. In all cases of irregularity or suspended monthly function and in all those nervous diseases depending upon local causes, Dr Pierce's Favorite Prescription will restore you to perfect health. Instead of the exhaustion and feeling of weight and dragging down in the abdomen, you feel fresh and strong. For young girls who suffer from irregularities, for the hard-working woman who suffers from catarrhal inflammation of the lining membranes causing a constant drain upon the system, there is no prescription used by any physician which can equal in results Dr. Pierce's. For over thirty years Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute of Buffalo, N. Y., has used his "Favorite Prescription" in the diseases of women which had long been his specialty and in fully ninety-eight per cent. of all cases, it has permanently cured.

MRS. CONKLIN.

Mrs. John M. Conklin, of Patterson, Putnam Co., N. Y., writes: "I am enjoying perfect health, and have been since I took the last bottle of Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I took five bottles of it. Never expected to be any better when I commenced taking it, but thank God, I can say that I am glad it reached my home. I had falling of the womb, and flowing caused by miscarriage, and was very weak when I commenced taking your medicines. I was cured by taking five bottles in all—two of the 'Favorite Prescription' and three of the 'Golden Medical Discovery.'"

Two Prayer Stories.

The late Dean Stanley used to relate that a gentleman once called to tell him that he had been into the abbey and had knelt down to pray, when the verger and come up to him and told him he must not kneel there. On asking why not the verger had said, "Why, sir, if I was once to allow it, we should have them praying all over the place." This recalls the gentleman visiting a church and asking the sexton whether people ever used it for private prayer, to which he replied, "I ketch'd two o' 'em at it once."—Argonaut.

A Dog in a Crowd.

It is really cruel to take a dog, and particularly a small one, into a crowd. No one possessing any imagination would ever do it. Can you fancy what the feelings of a little animal must be when it finds itself in a perfect forest of legs, each leg provided with a foot shod in hard leather and liable to come down on one of its poor little paws? Its small brain must be in a ferment of apprehension all the time, and if it could command any language it would probably be of a powerful kind.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Location of Eden.

We are now informed that the true location of the garden of Eden is in the interior of Africa, somewhere near the sources of the Nile. We are told that all the "conditions" favor this location. It is a sad fact that the friends of other locations are equally sanguine. For instance, President Warren of Boston university wrote a volume to prove that the true location of Eden was at the north pole. It will be noted that we have no mention of Eden anywhere in the Bible after the first chapter of Genesis.—Hartford Religious Herald.

Bridget's Appreciation.

A lady employed a very ignorant Irish servant, who would not rise in the morning at a sufficiently early hour. An alarm was therefore bought and presented to the servant with the words, "You know, Bridget, that I require the fire alight every morning by 7 o'clock; but I cannot get you to do it; so I have bought you this alarm." Bridget examined it and said: "Thank you, mum; it's very pretty. But fancy a thing loike this bein able to loight a foire. Sure it's a wonderful invention, mum."—London Household Words.

Sovereign talks like a calamity howler.

The treasury deficit may not be booming, but it is still maintaining "a steady, substantial growth."

If half the newspaper reports are true, it would seem it will not be long until there are no Armenians to fight about.

Hon. W. M. Hahn, Ohio member of the Republican National committee, thinks the convention next year will be held about June 10.

As a "tail twister" Secretary Olney promised much, but there is a tendency to believe that he has fallen into the even tenor of his predecessor's way.

The New York Press believes that so far as the third term is concerned the Republicans are willing to have Cleveland run again if the Democrats are.

Sovereign makes reference to his boycott of national bank notes. Is it possible that the pressure is still on with nobody but Sovereign knowing anything about it?

The total railway mileage in the country at the close of 1894 is reported at 178,708 an increase of 2,247 miles during the year. The aggregate exceeds that of all Europe.

Consul Claude Meeker, who came home a few days before election to save his friend, ex-Governor Campbell, from utter defeat, will sail for Bradford, England, in a few days.

Editor Dana, of the New York Sun says he "esteems Mr. Brice, not as an able young man of the day, but as one of the cutest trappers in the field." But just think of the bait he possesses.

The potato crop of the United States this year is 282,000,000. The increase over last year is only about 100,000,000 bushels. There seems to be an increase in everything but Democrats this year.

"The cradle of democracy" is on exhibition at Atlanta. For fear that there might be a misunderstanding about this it should be explained that "the cradle of democracy" is "the cradle in which Thomas Jefferson was rocked." It was not a cradle at all, but a stiff uppercut which put the democracy to sleep now some ten days since.

The weather bureau at Washington has issued a pamphlet which discredits the theory that lightning never strikes twice in the same place, and instances are cited. Another remarkable fact shown is that barns in the country are seldom struck during the season of the year when they are empty, but suffer most just after harvest, when they are full.

The report prepared for the first assistant postmaster general shows that in the free delivery offices investigated by the secret agents from August 1 to the present time the following Ohio offices have been found in excellent condition: Alliance, Zanesville, Sandusky, Massillon, Akron, Youngstown Steubenville, East Liverpool, Hamilton, Delaware, Middletown, Painesville, Marion, Oberlin.

During the celebration in honor of her 80th birthday, Mrs Elizabeth Cady Stanton, the leader of the woman's rights advocates, made an address in which she urged that the women should now make a contest for equal rights in the churches. She believed that the time had come when the women should be given a part in the management of the religious affairs of the country. The movement now on foot in the Methodist church to allow women to sit as lay delegates in the general conferences is a step in the direction advocated by this veteran leader, and whether immediately successful or not it is undoubtedly a beginning that will ultimately result in the end sought.

A SECOND LECTURE

DELIVERED BY DR. J. E. LANCELEY AT THE EPWORTH CHURCH.

"One Another" Was Repeated by Request and Although the Audience Was Not an Enthusiastic One the Lecturer Did Full Justice to Himself.

Dr. J. E. Lanceley delivered his second lecture, the subject of which was "One Another," at the Epworth M E church Thursday evening to an audience which was far in size from what it should have been

The stormy weather had its effect on the attendance, no doubt, but it is more than probable that the Elk entertainment was responsible for keeping many more away.

As it was the lecture was necessarily handicapped by the smallness of the attendance and the further fact that it was one of the coldest and most unresponsive audiences that ever assembled in the church. That the speaker was able, under the circumstances, to make his effort what it really was showed how great is his power as a speaker and how hard he worked to accomplish the end in view.

"One Another," with the possible exception of "The Minister and His Theme," is the strongest and best lecture delivered in Marion by Dr. Lanceley and its beauty of language as well as of thought grows upon the hearer long after the words of the speaker have died away.

While the first impression might be that it had a tendency toward lightness as the days pass thought after thought will develop and it will be seen that the apparent lightness was but the vehicle upon which to carry thoughts of gold.

So complete an outline of "One Another" was given in the STAR at the time of the Methodist conference that it will hardly be necessary to do other than make reference to the fact that it is the lecture in which the eminent orator proves most satisfactorily that the Supreme One has so arranged affairs that the blessings of this world are dealt out to the masses and not to the few.

The aim of the lecturer is to do away with envy, with jealousy, with discontent and to establish peace, content and happiness in their places. That his lecture shows up to the best possible advantage the sunny side of life, goes without saying.

Having heard Dr. Lanceley in "One Another," the world must be better and brighter and happier, and the dismal tones of gray and blue and black which at times accompany us must give way to tints of silver and pink and yellow and gold.

SHE HAS NO FRIENDS.

England Is Cordially Hated by the Powers of the World.

The American government enjoys amicable relations with all the powers of Europe and with all the governments of Asia, Africa and South and Central America.

Our friendliness is more marked with some European powers than with others.

A prominent English journal recently made complaint that England has not a single friend among the other governments in the world and that she is either disliked or hated by every one of them.

We suppose, therefore, it will be admitted by the impartial observer that the position of the American government is a far prouder one than that of the British government.

The man who is hated by everybody may attribute the hatred to his own superiority, but other people know better. They know he is insolent or mean or selfish or quarrelsome. The man who lives on the right terms with everybody, or aims to do so, must have more sense than the other man, and he has a great advantage over him in life.

It is the ways of England that cause so many other countries to hate her. She was insolent to Japan at the opening of the late war, when Japan's victories were not foreseen. She has been defiant toward China since China was beaten. She has angered the Turk by wheedling him at one time and threatening him at another. She has given France and Russia offense by her grasping policy in Egypt, eastern Asia and elsewhere. She has excited the enmity of Venezuela by her territorial greed. When Brazil was in straits a few years ago on account of a domestic rebellion, England incurred Brazil's hatred by threatening to bombard and seize the capital, while this country secured Brazil's gratitude by assuming a friendly attitude at the critical moment.

England is always a great deal more presumptuous toward a weak country than toward a strong one. She will swagger or will slink, according to circumstances and to whom she is dealing with.

The remark of the London Spectator, that England has not a friend in the world, is true.—New York Sun.

NEW SUBMARINE BOAT.

A Cigar Shaped Vessel That Has Just Been Finished In France.

A submarine boat has just been completed by M. Goubet on the Seine for a foreign government, which, it is said, solves the problem of marine locomotion. It is cigar shaped, 26 feet long and nearly 6 broad, of bronze, and weighs 10 tons. It is divided into three portions, and everything is arranged so that heavy articles can be kept in their places, so that no risk will be run of disturbing the balance essential to stability, the craft always keeping parallel with the surface.

It is the immobility claimed for the boat which constitutes one of the most important features of the submarine craft. Hitherto these boats have been built only to be sent down or brought up while in motion, but this boat, the inventor maintains, can be manœuvered in one spot by the skillful working of pumps and arranging of water ballast so as to meet necessary requirements. A weight of 2,500 pounds is attached to the keel in such a manner that it can be got rid of at any moment.

In the event of a sudden rise to the surface being imperative, the boat would respond to the call with the lightness of cork. Compressed air contained in steel tubes is supplemented by caustic potassium and chlorate of chalk for the removal of vitiated air. Thus it is calculated that a crew of three persons might stay under water from 12 to 15 hours without danger.

It will be propelled by a one horsepower electric motor at a speed of nine knots. For a boat capable of accommodating 100 passengers only 25 horsepower would be required. The boat has been constructed for naval purposes and material for letting off torpedoes by means of compressed air through the simple pulling of a trigger is provided. Trials of the boat were made in the Seine a few days ago.—Special Cable Dispatch to New York Sun.

A Historical Farm Sold.

The farm known as the "old Temple farm," on the York river, at Yorktown, Va., has just been sold to a gentleman from Columbus, O Next to Jamestown, Va., the Temple farm is the most historical and in ways the most celebrated of any farm in the United States. The farm contains about 500 acres and was sold for $45,000. The present owner proposes to make his permanent residence there. —New York Times.

IS APERGY A REALITY

J. J. ASTOR, THE MILLIONAIRE, BUYS UP KEELY MOTOR STOCK.

The Flying Machine Predicted—"Callisto" May Be a Fact—Predicted Discovery of a New Force—Laws of Gravity Revolutionized.

The news that John Jacob Astor had purchased a big slice of the stock of the Keely Motor company created a sensation. This stock has so long been regarded as of doubtful value, and Keely's motor has become so universally known as a motor that will not "mote," that the fact of any one's desiring to buy stock in the concern excites curiosity.

Colonel Astor bought all the Keely motor stock owned by Mrs. Bloomfield Moore, whose interest in the invention at first was very marked, but later she declared that she believed that Keely was not aiming at anything but a motive power for an airship, and her willingness to sell out has been known for some time.

Perhaps it is for just the reason that Mrs. Moore disbelieves in the motor that Colonel Astor is so eager to push the invention, for that he has faith in some contrivance that will navigate the air is well known.

It is not generally known that a good deal of Colonel Astor's leisure time is spent in inventing an airship, something corresponding to his Callisto, in his highly ingenious novel, "A Journey to

JOHN JACOB ASTOR.

Other Worlds." The chief difficulty met with by all inventors of flying machines or airships is gravity. Now, Keely's invention distinctly claims for itself the creation of an entirely new force and as much stronger than electricity as that is superior to steam.

In Colonel Astor's book he describes a new force, which makes flying for man possible. This force he calls "apergy" and says that it is obtained by simply blending negative and positive electricity with electricity of the third element or state, and by charging a body sufficiently with this fluid gravitation is nullified or partly reversed, and the earth repels the body with the same or greater power than that with which it still attracts or attracted it, so that it may be suspended or caused to move away into space.

Now, this is precisely what Keely claims that his motor will do—produce "apergy."

It is interesting to note that Colonel Astor remarks, in his work regarding "apergy," "With this force what may we not achieve?"

In describing the airship of the future he calls it an "aeroplane," which, he asserts, came into use when a suitable motor power was discovered He says that this is to be obtained from very light paper cell batteries, which first must be charged from a dynamo, after which they can supply full currents for 100 hours, enough to take the vessel around the globe. He says the power is to be applied through turbine screws, half of which are capable of propelling the flat deck in its inclined position at sufficient speed to prevent its falling.

The airships—whose length varies from 50 to 500 feet—have rudders for giving a vertical or a horizontal motion and several strengthening keels that prevent leeway when turning. They are entirely on the principle of birds, maintaining themselves mechanically, and differing thus from the unwieldy balloon.

With a Keely motor in such a ship as described—supposing of course that the motor would do all that is claimed for it—Colonel Astor might have the satisfaction of seeing an invention existing only on paper so far a reality. In this connection, a description of the airship in which the heroes of Colonel Astor visited Jupiter is decidedly interesting.

This vessel was a gluciniun cylinder 25 feet in diameter, 15 feet high on the sides, with a domed roof, bringing up the total height to 21 feet, with a small gutter about it to catch the rain on Jupiter. The sides, roof and floor were of two sheets, each one-third of an inch thick and six inches apart, the space between filled with mineral wool, as a protection against the intense cold of space. There were several keels underneath. Large, toughened plate glass windows were in the roof and sides, and smaller ones in the floor, all furnished with thick shades and curtains. The floors were of lattice work, like those in the engine room of a steamship. There was a crow's nest or observatory at the top.

That Colonel Astor will try to apply the Keely motor to a flying machine seems positive, from the way his friends talk. He himself is reticent on the subject, and will not state whether or not he will begin to apply the motor to airship purposes as soon as it is in working condition, which, it is [illegible] by stockholders, will certainly be [illegible] than next spring.—New York Recorder

BUSINESS COLLEGE CLOSES.

These Educational Institutions Seem To Be Hoodooed in Marion.

The Marion Business college recently launched in the Fisher block, with more than usual promise by Messrs. Dodson & Alexander, has gone the way of its score of predecessors in Marion, and reached the end of its string Failure to enroll a sufficient number of pupils to bring sufficient revenue is the cause of collapse.

Messrs. Dodson & Alexander announced to their assembled pupils Thursday night that the college had gone as far as it could, that a local firm had taken judgment against them for a bill of college furnishings, and there was no way to meet it. There was no further explanation.

Marion has had a peculiar experience with the business college projectors. Time and again a new venture has been made, and every time a hopeful public has been told that the last one was organized on a firm basis, but every one has turned out short of the needed funds and failed.

Perhaps some day we shall get a business college that knows the business principle that leads to success and will succeed.

MASONIC REUNION.

Scottish Rite Degrees Conferred Upon Sixteen Candidates at Columbus.

This morning's Columbus Journal says:

The reunion of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite Masons of the Valley of Columbus began in this city yesterday afternoon at their temple on east Town street, a number of visiting Masons being in attendance and assisting in the initiation ceremonies. Work in the Enoch Lodge of Perfection was commenced at 1 o'clock in the afternoon and was continued until the hour of holding the banquet, which took place at 6 o'clock. The work in the Enoch lodge included the taking of all degrees up to the fourteenth. 16 candidates receiving the degrees.

At the conclusion of the afternoon's work a sumptuous banquet was held, at which covers were laid for 150 people. After the supper was finished a discussion of plans for raising funds for the proposed new Masonic temple took place, together with short addresses by prominent Masons upon business matters of interest to the different lodges.

The erection of the new temple is being strongly advocated and plans have been adopted. The temple is to be erected upon the property owned by the Scottish Rite Masons on Fourth street, under the supervision of Enoch lodge. The temple will cost $100,000, of which the Scottish Rite Masons will subscribe $50,000 and the balance is to be furnished by the Masons of other lodges.

The work of the order will be continued today and tonight, during which in the afternoon, the ancient, historical and traditional grades will be conferred, followed by a banquet in the evening.

After the banquet work in the philosophic and chivalric grades will be taken up.

Among the candidates who are taking the degrees are William Fies and Busby P Sweney, of Marion.

RAILROAD NOTES

For the month of October the Columbus, Sandusky and Hocking shows an increase as follows: 1895, $99,890.71. 1894, $98,133.83.

The autumn number of the Big Four industrial series just out gives a fine illustration of the new No. 200 engine, which is making such an excellent speed record.

This morning's Columbus Journal has the following concerning the future of a well-known Marion man: "J. S. Beale is spoken of as Ben Akin's successor as district passenger agent of the Cleveland, Akron and Columbus lines in this city. He has a position offered him at Sandusky with the Columbus, Sandusky and Hocking."

An unlooked for change has been made in the official family of the C. S. and H. This morning S. T. Earley, division roadmaster, with headquarters in this city, was notified that his services were no longer needed. Attached to the letter was a recomendation and an explanation stating that the only cause of his dismissal was due to the fact that a decrease in the force was necessary. It recommended him to positions on other roads. Mr. Earley is one of the best railroad men in this part of the state. He has refused several offers of roadmaster-hip on other roads and his present dismissal was a surprise. He will probably go to the Ohio Central.

Columbus Journal: Articles of incorporation of the Erie Railroad company, under the new reorganization plan, were filed with the secretary of state of New York Thursday. The capital is $146,600,000 and the corporation tax of $182 500 is the largest ever paid the state. The directors are Temple Bowdoin, Charles H. Coster, John H. Emanuel, jr., A. H. Gillard, A. B. Hopper, T. W. Joyce, Walter Schuyler Kenneys, J. P. Morgan, jr., Francis Lynde, Mortimer Fitzallen, W. S. Townsend, H. J Tierney, E. B. Thomas. The board of directors organized in New York by the election of the following officers: E. B. Thomas, president; Andrew Donaldson, third vice president; G. G Cochran, fourth vice president; J. A. Middleton, secretary, and Richard White, treasurer. The new company will operate the Erie lines, New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio and Chicago and Erie properties from December 1, 1895.

THEY HEARD BURGLARS.

And Mr. Noolicwed Displays the Courage That Is Usual.

This time it was Mr. Noolicwed who heard burglars, and he prepared to go boldly down and meet them in mortal combat He was pale, but firm.

"Oh, Algy, dear," cried his wife, clinging to him, "don't go! The silver, being our wedding presents, is mostly plated, anyhow."

"A man's house is his castle, my love. Shall I allow"—

"Well, then, let us hoist the window and ask Mr. Homer from next door to come in the back way and surprise them He said only yesterday that he would be pleased to have us call on him at any time."

"Say no more, Aphilia I have promised at the altar to protect you, and I will. They are in the dining room, and I shall start down the back stairs and confront them You may stand at the window and hail a policeman, should one pass."

In spite of this Mrs. Noolicwed shut herself in a closet until she suddenly remembered that she had married Algy for better or for worse. Then she decided that it was her duty to assist him. She cautiously opened the door and peered into the hall. All was dark and silent, and she crept down the stairs. In the dining room was the sound of a scuffle

"What shall I do?" she moaned. "They are killing Algy, I know, and I shall be a widow before my wedding clothes are out of style!"

Just then the door flew violently open and two dark figures rolled into the hall at her feet. With a courage which surprised her, she flew at the burglar who was on top. In the midst of this diversion the figure underneath sprang to his feet and flew out of the front door, while Mrs. Noolicwed shrieked.

"Are you going for the police, Algy? Do hurry, then; I can't hold the wretch long."

With a bound he, too, was on his feet, and to her horror she saw the convulsed features of her lord.

"Good gracious, Aphilia, have you no sense! I"—

"Why, Algy, I thought you were the burglar and I"—

"And I thought you were another of the gang, so"—

"And I came to the rescue and"—

"Well, you rescued him all right enough, if that was what you were after."

With this scathing remark, Mr. Noolicwed started up stairs in search of the arnica while his wife mentally decided that marriage was a failure and that she was not sorry she had bought that new hat, after all.—Chicago Times-Herald.

LIVES SNATCHED FROM AWFUL PERIL A MILE BEYOND SHORE

The Ring Rescue at the Crib of Tunnel in Lake Michigan—The Work Watched by a Newspaper Man—Tales From the Life Savers' Logbooks.

[Copyright ...]

... incident ... which all ... usually ... terror ... the ... swept ... down from the northwest, ... destruction ... its path. The ... of the ... was heightened by torrents of rain driven with it, smiting boats ... ships, likewise mocking ... structures lining the ... seas. Wrecks were numerous on the coasts of Michigan, Illinois and Ohio, where the gale had full sweep. At times the summoning signals came to the life savers two at once, and returning from the rescue of one crew the crew would be met with urgent calls to hasten elsewhere. Had the party been afloat which urged the ... of the Chicago station crew throughout the forenoon of that day in front of ... in the heaving sea perhaps fortune might have carried them ashore in safety. As it was, 10 out of 15 were lost, 1 escaped by miraculous luck and 4 were rescued under the most trying circumstances by the life savers.

The 15 unfortunates caught in a terrible plight were at work building an intake at the lake end of a tunnel which supplies water for the works in Hyde Park, a suburb of Chicago, some seven or eight miles south of the harbor. The end of the tunnel is one mile from shore. As the season was advancing the contractors endeavored to complete the work before winter, and in order to save time arranged temporary quarters upon the platform of the crib where the men could lodge and save the time necessary to go in and out from shore. A slight board structure was erected upon the platform, which rested upon piles. In it the men slept and cooked and ate their meals. About midnight, when all were tossing in their bunks, the wind arose, and in a short time the swelling waves began to rock the piles and even push up the planks of the floor. The men turned out and long before the usual hour had taken breakfast so as to be prepared for the worst. Scarcely was the meal finished when their barracks began to totter, and they abandoned it to escape being caught under the roof, should it fall. Outside there was no shelter from the pelting storm, nor, as it proved, from the fury of the sea. The platform was inclosed by chains strung between timbers or piles fastened upright to the piles. Beyond the verge of the platform was nothing but the black waters of the lake. Crouching upon the plank and clinging to the timbers and chains, the drenched and shivering workmen passed the early morning hours without a ray of hope. They had no boat and no means of signaling for help. About daylight the building collapsed and was swept away. To this apparent calamity the few who survived owed their lives. No one was hurt when the structure went down, but afterward the seas seemed to dash with greater force upon the platform. In a short time that, too, disappeared, plank by plank. Upon the piles and stringers and a stout truss binding them the poor fellows took refuge. They were able to keep above water a few feet, but yet when the waves dashed high had to fight for life.

The demolition of the workmen's barracks drew the attention of the waterworks superintendent to the grave peril of those at the crib. He had no boats, however—at least none that could outride the tempestuous sea. The towing companies of the harbor were hastily appealed to, and the news spread like wildfire along shore. Crowds gathered along the wharves and piers, but they too were powerless. Word reached Keeper St. Peter of the District No. 11 life crew, also at Sedgwick. The surfboat was hastily run out, and just then a tug boat came down the river past the station house. The tug captain needed but one glance across the lake to decide him from attempting to aid the life savers, which would be at the risk of swamping his boat. Finding themselves unsupported except by the good wishes of sailors and spectators on the piers the crew set out to brave the dangers ahead. Where tugboat captains dared not venture brave hearts could at least try. The keeper knew that in case his men capsized in the cold water they could never row back against the wind, and he ordered the boat hauled by teams down the beach to and the probable landing of the surfboat on drifting ashore.

"The boat fairly flew before the gale on its run, which practically ended the trip to the crib, and was all the ... craft could stagger under," says the official narrator, describing the rescue by the life savers. THE SOHO ANARCHISTS.

By ROBERT BARR.

[Copyright, 1895, by the Author.]

It has been said in the London papers that the dissolution of the Soho Anarchist league was caused by want of funds. This is very far from being the case. An anarchist league has no need for funds, and so long as there is money enough to buy beer the league is sure of continued existence. The truth about the scattering of the Soho organization was told me by a young newspaper man who was chairman at the last meeting.

The young man was not an anarchist, though he had to pretend to be one in the interests of his paper, and so joined the Soho league, where he made some fiery speeches that were much applauded. At last anarchist news became a drug in the market, and the editor of the paper young Marshall Simkins belonged to told him that he would now have to turn his attention to parliamentary work, as he would print no more anarchist news in the sheet.

One night think that young Simkins would have been glad to get rid of his anarchist work, as he had no love for the cause. He was glad to get rid of it, but he found some difficulty in sending in his resignation. The moment he spoke of resigning the members became suspicious of him. He had always been rather better dressed than the others, and besides he drank less beer. If a man wishes to be in good standing in the league he must not be fastidious as to dress and he must be constructed to hold at least a gallon of beer at a sitting. Simkins was merely a "quiet" man, and this would have told against him all along if it had not been for the extra gunpowder he put in his speeches. On several occasions seasoned anarchists had gathered about him and begged him to give up his designs on the parliament buildings.

The older heads claimed that, desirable as was the obliteration of the houses of parliament, the time was not yet ripe for it. England, they pointed out, was the only place where anarchists could live and talk unmolested, so while they were quite anxious that Simkins should go and blow up Vienna, Berlin or Paris they were not willing for him to begin on London. Simkins was usually calmed down with much difficulty, and finally, after hissing "Cowards!" two or three times under his breath, he concluded with, "Oh, very well, then, you know better than I do—I am only a young recruit—but allow me at least to blow up Waterloo bridge or spring a bomb in Fleet street, just to show that we are up and doing."

But this the anarchists would not sanction. If he wanted to blow up bridges he could try his hand on those across the seine. They had given their word that there would be no explosives in London so long as England allowed them an asylum.

"But look at Trafalgar square," cried Simkins angrily. "We are not allowed to meet there."

"Who wants to meet there?" said the chairman. "It is ever so much more comfortable in the crypts, and there is no beer in Trafalgar square." "Yes, yes," put in several others. Thus was Simkins calmed down and beer allowed to flow again in tranquility, while some foreign anarchist, who was not allowed to set foot in his native country, would get up and harangue the crowd in broken English and tell them what great things would yet be done by dynamite.

But when Simkins sent in his resignation a change came over their feelings toward him and he saw at once that he was a marked man. The chairman, in a whisper, advised him to withdraw his resignation. So Simkins, who was a shrewd young fellow, understanding the temper of the assembly, arose and said:

"I have no desire to resign, but you do nothing except talk, and I want to belong to an anarchist society that acts." He stalked away from the next meeting, and tried to drop them in that way, but a committee from the league called upon him at his lodgings, and his landlady thought that young Simkins had got into bad ways when he had such evil looking men visiting him.

Simkins was in a dilemma, and could not think what to do. The anarchists apparently were not to be shaken off. He appealed to his editor for advice on the situation, but that good man could think of no way out of the trouble.

"You ought to have known better," he said, "than to mix up with such people."

"But how was I to get the news?" asked Simkins, with some indignation. The editor shrugged his shoulders. "That was not his part of the business, and if the anarchists chose to make things uncomfortable for the young man he could not help it.

Simkins' fellow lodger, a student who was studying chemistry in London, noticed that the reporter was becoming gaunt with anxiety.

"Simkins," said Sedlitz to him one morning, "you are haggard and careworn. What is the matter with you? Are you in love, or is it merely debt that is bothering you?"

"Neither," replied Simkins.

"Then cheer up," said Sedlitz. "If one or the other is not bothering you, then anything else is easily remedied."

"I am not so sure of that," rejoined Simkins. And then he sat down and told his friend just what was troubling him.

"Ah," said Sedlitz, "that accounts for it. There has been a ruffianly looking man marching up and down, watching this house. They are on your track, Simkins, my boy, and when they discover that you are a reporter, and therefore necessarily a traitor, you will be nabbed some dark night."

"Well, that's encouraging," said Simkins, with his head in his hands.

"Are these anarchists brave men, and would they risk their lives in any undertaking?" asked Sedlitz.

"Oh, I don't know. They talk enough, but I don't know what they would do. They are quite capable though of tripping me up in a dark alley."

"Look here," said Sedlitz, "suppose you let me try a plan. Let me give them a lecture on the 'Chemistry of Anarchy.' It's a fascinating subject."

"What good would that do?"

"Oh, wait till you have heard the lecture. If I don't make the hair of some of them stand on end they are braver men than I expect them to be. We have a large room in Clement's inn where we students meet to try experiments and smoke tobacco. It is half club and half lecture room. Now, I propose to get those anarchists in there, lock the doors, and tell them something about dynamite and other explosives. You give out that I am an anarchist from America. Tell them that the doors will be locked to prevent police interference and that there will be a barrel of beer. You can introduce me as a man from America, where they know as much about anarchism in ten minutes as they do here in ten years. Tell them that I have spent my life in the study of explosives. I will have to make up a little, but you know that I am a very good amateur actor, and I don't think there will be any trouble about that. At the last you must tell them that you have an appointment and will leave me to amuse them for a couple of hours."

"But I don't see what good it is all going to do, though I am desperate," said Simkins, "and willing to try anything. I have thought some of firing off a bomb myself at an anarchist meeting."

When the Friday night of meeting arrived the large hall in Clement's inn was filled to the doors. Those assembled there saw a platform at one end of the apartment and a door that led from it to a room at the back of the hall. A table was on the platform, and boxes, chemical apparatus and other scientific looking paraphernalia were on it. At the hour of 8 young Simkins appeared before the table alone.

"Fellow anarchists," he said, "you are all well aware that I am tired of the great amount of talk we do and the little action which follows it. I have been fortunate enough to secure the co-operation of an anarchist from America, who will tell you something of the cause there. We have had the doors locked, and those who keep the keys are now down at the entrance of the inn, so that if a fire should occur they can quickly come and let us out. There is no great danger of fire, however, but the interruption of the police must be guarded against very carefully. The windows, as you see, are shuttered and barred, and no ray of light can penetrate from this room outside. Until the lecture is over no one can leave the room, and by the same token no one can enter it, which is more to the purpose.

"My friend, Professor Josiah P. Slivers, has devoted his life to the chemistry of anarchy, which is the title of this lecture. He will tell you of some important discoveries which are now to be made known for the first time. I regret to say that the professor is not in a very good state of health, because the line of life which he has adopted has its drawbacks. He's left eye has been blown away by a premature explosion during his experiments. His left leg is also permanently disabled. His left arm, as you will notice, is in a sling, having been injured by a little disaster in his workshop since he came to London. He is a man, as you will see, devoted body and soul to the cause, so I hope you will listen to him attentively. I regret that I am unable to remain with you tonight, having other duties to perform which are imperative. I will, therefore, if you will permit me, leave by the back entrance after I have introduced the professor to you."

At this moment the stumping of a wooden leg was heard, and those in the audience saw appear a man on a crutch, with one arm in a sling and a bandage over one eye, although he beamed upon them benevolently with the other.

"Fellow anarchists," said Simkins, "allow me to introduce to you Professor Josiah P. Slivers of the United States."

The professor bowed and the audience applauded. As soon as the applause began the professor held up his unmaimed arm and said, "Gentlemen, I beg that you will not applaud."

It seems the fashion in America to address all sorts and conditions of men as "gentlemen." The professor continued: "I have here some explosives so sensitive that the slightest vibration will cause them to go off, and I therefore ask you to listen in silence to what I have to say. I must particularly ask you also not to stamp on the floor."

Before these remarks were concluded Simkins had slid out by the back entrance, and somehow his desertion seemed to have a depressing effect upon the company, who looked upon the broken up professor with eyes of wonder and apprehension.

The professor drew toward him one of the boxes and opened the lid. He dipped his one useful hand into the box, and, holding it aloft, he allowed something which looked like wet sawdust to drip through his fingers. "That, gentlemen," he said, with an air of the utmost contempt, "is what is known to the world as dynamite. I have nothing at all to say against dynamite. It has, in its day, been a very powerful medium through which our opinions have been imparted to a listening world, but its day is past. It is what the lumbering stagecoach is to the locomotive, what the letter is to the telegram, what the sailing vessel is to the steamship. It will be my pleasant duty tonight to exhibit to you an explosive so powerful and deadly that hereafter, having seen what it can accomplish, you will have nothing but derision for such simple, harmless compounds as dynamite and nitroglycerin."

The professor looked with kindly sympathy over his audience as he allowed the yellow mixture to slowly percolate through his fingers back into the box again. Ever and anon he took up a fresh handful and repeated the action.

The anarchists in the audience exchanged uneasy glances one with the other.

"Yet," continued the professor, "it will be useful for us to consider this substance for a few moments, if but for the purpose of comparison. Here," he said, diving his hand into another box and bringing up before their gaze a yellow brick, "is dynamite in a compressed form. There is enough here to wreck all this part of London, were it exploded. This simple brick would lay St. Paul's cathedral in ruins; so, however antiquated dynamite may become, we must always look upon it with respect, just as we look upon reformers of centuries ago who perished for their opinions, even though their opinions were far behind what ours are now. I shall take the liberty of performing some experiments with this block of dynamite." Saying which, the professor, with his free arm, flung the block of dynamite far down the aisle, where it fell on the floor with a sickening thud. The audience sprang from their seats and tumbled back one over the other. A wild shriek went up into the air, but the professor gazed placidly on the troubled mob below him with a superior smile on his face. "I beg you to seat yourselves," he said, "and for reasons which I have already explained I trust that you will not applaud any of my remarks. You have just now portrayed one of the popular superstitions about dynamite, and you show by your actions how necessary a lecture of this sort is in order that you may comprehend thoroughly the substance with which you have to deal. That brick is perfectly harmless, because it is frozen. Dynamite in its frozen state will not explode—a fact well understood by miners and all those who have to work with it, and who, as a rule, generally prefer to blow themselves to pieces trying to thaw the substance before a fire. Will you kindly bring that brick back to me before it thaws out in the heated atmosphere of this room?"

One of the men stepped gingerly forward and picked up the brick, holding it far from his body as he tiptoed up to the platform, where he laid it down carefully on the desk before the professor.

"Thank you," said the professor blandly.

The man drew a long breath of relief as he went to his seat.

"That is frozen dynamite," continued the professor, "and is, as I have said, practically harmless. Now, it will be my pleasure to perform two startling experiments with the unfrozen substance," and with that he picked up a handful of the wet sawdust and flung it on a small iron anvil that stood on the table. "You will enjoy these experiments," he said, "because it will show you with what ease dynamite may be handled. It is a popular error that concussion will cause dynamite to explode. There is enough dynamite here to blow up this hall and to send into oblivion every person in it, yet you will see whether or not concussion will explode it." The professor seized a hammer and struck the substance on the anvil two or three sharp blows, while those in front of him scrambled wildly back over their comrades, with hair standing on end. The professor ceased his pounding and gazed reproachfully at them; then something on the anvil appeared to catch his eye. He bent over it and looked critically on the surface of the iron. Drawing himself up to his full height again, he said: "I was about to reproach you for what might have appeared to any other man as evidence of fear, but I see my mistake. I came very near making a disastrous error. I have myself suffered from time to time from similar errors. I notice now upon the anvil a small spot of grease; if my hammer had happened to strike there you would all now be writhing in your death agonies under the ruins of this building. Nevertheless the lesson is not without its value. That spot of grease is free nitroglycerin that has oozed out from the dynamite. Therein rests perhaps the only danger in handling dynamite. As I have shown you, you can smash up dynamite on an anvil without danger, but if a hammer happened to strike a spot of free nitroglycerin it would explode in a moment. I beg to apologize to you for my momentary neglect."

Holding it far from his body as he tiptoed up to the platform.

"Allow me to introduce to you Professor Josiah P. Slivers."

A man rose up in the middle of the hall, and it was some little time before he could command voice enough to speak, for he was shaking as if from palsy. As last he said, after he had moistened his lips several times:

"Professor, we are quite willing to take your word about the explosive. I think I speak for all my comrades here. We have no doubt at all about your learning and would much prefer to hear from your own lips what you have to say on the subject and not have you waste any more valuable time with experiments. I have not consulted with my comrades before speaking, but I think I voice the sense of the meeting." Cries of "You do! you do!" came from all parts of the hall. The professor once more beamed upon them benevolently.

"Your confidence in me is indeed touching," he said, "but a chemical lecture without experiments is like a body without a soul. Experiment is the soul of research. In chemistry we must take nothing for granted. I have shown you how many popular errors have arisen regarding the substance with which we are dealing. It would have been impossible for these errors to have arisen if every man had experimented for himself, and although I thank you for the mark of confidence you have bestowed upon me I cannot bring myself to deprive you of the pleasure which my experiments will afford you. There is another very common error to the effect that fire will explode dynamite. Such, gentlemen, is not the case."

The professor struck a match on his trousers leg and lighted the substance on the anvil. It burned with a pale bluish flame, and the professor gazed around triumphantly at his fellow anarchists.

While the shuddering audience watched with intense fascination the pale bluish flame the professor suddenly stooped over and blew it out. Straightening himself once more, he said, "Again I must apologize to you, for again I have forgotten the small spot of grease. If the flame had reached the spot of nitroglycerin it would have exploded, as you all know. When a man has his thoughts concentrated on one subject he is apt to forget something else. I shall make no more experiments with dynamite. Here, John," he said to the trembling attendant, "take this box away, and move it carefully, for I see that the nitroglycerin is oozing out. Put it as tenderly down in the next room as if it were a box of eggs."

As the box disappeared there was a simultaneous long drawn sigh of relief from the audience.

"Now, gentlemen," said the professor, "we come to the subject that ought to occupy the minds of all thoughtful men." He smoothed his hair complacently with the palm of his practicable hand, and smiled genially around him.

"The substance that I am about to tell you of is my own invention, and compares with dynamite as prussic acid does to new milk as a beverage." The professor dipped his fingers in his vest pocket and drew out what looked like a box of pills. Taking one pill out he placed it upon the anvil, and as he tiptoed back he smiled on it with a smile of infinite tenderness. "Before I begin on this subject I want to warn you once more that if any man as much as stamps upon the floor or moves about except on tiptoe this substance will explode and will lay London from here to Charing Cross in one mass of indistinguishable ruins. I have spent ten years of my life in completing this invention. And these pills, worth a million a box, will cure all ills to which the flesh is heir.

"John," he said, turning to his attendant, "bring me a basin of water." The basin of water was gingerly placed upon the table, and the professor emptied all the pills into it, picking up also the one that was on the anvil and putting it with the others.

"Now," he said, with a deep sigh, "we can breathe easier. A man can put one of these pills in a little vial of water, put the vial in his vest pocket, go to Trafalgar square, take the pill from the vial, throw it in the middle of the square, and it will shatter everything within the four mile radius, he himself having the glorious privilege of suffering instant martyrdom for the cause. People have told me that there is a drawback to my invention, but I am inclined to differ with them. The one who uses this must make up his mind to share the fate of those around him. I claim that this is the crowning glory of my invention. It puts to instant test our interest in the great cause. John, I see is very carefully that machine with the electric wire attachment from the next room."

The machine was placed upon the table. "This," said the professor, holding up some invisible object between his thumb and forefinger, "is the most caustic needle. I will take upon the point of it an invisible portion of the substance I speak of." Here he carefully picked out a pill from the basin, and as carefully placed it upon the table, where he detached an infinitesimal atom of it and held it up on the point of the needle. "This particle," he said, "is so small that it cannot be seen except with the aid of a microscope. I will now place needle and all on the machine and touch it off with an electric current." As his hand hovered over the push button there were cries of "Stop! stop!" but the finger descended and instantly there was a terrific explosion. The very foundation seemed shaken and a dense cloud of smoke rolled over the heads of the audience. As the professor became visible through the thinning smoke he looked around for his audience. Every man was under the benches, and groans came from all parts of the hall. "I hope," said the professor in anxious tones, "that no one has been hurt. I am afraid that I took up too much of the substance on the point of the needle, but it will enable you to imagine the effect of a larger quantity. Pray seat yourselves again. This is my last experiment."

As the audience again seated itself another mutual sigh ascended to the roof. The professor drew the chairman's chair toward him and sat down, wiping his grimy brow.

A man instantly arose and said, "I move a vote of thanks to Professor Slivers for the interesting"—

The professor raised his hand. "One moment," he said. "I have not quite finished. I have a proposal to make to you. You see that cloud of smoke hovering over our heads. In 30 minutes that smoke will percolate down through the atmosphere. I have told you but half of the benefits of this terrific explosive. When that smoke mixes with the atmosphere of the room it becomes a deadly poison. We all can live here for the next 10 minutes in perfect safety; then at the first breath we draw we expire instantly. It is a lovely death. There is no pain, no contortion of the countenance, but we will be found here in the morning, stark and stiff in our seats. I propose, gentlemen, that we teach London the great lesson it so much needs. No cause is without its martyrs. Let us be the martyrs of the great religion of anarchy. I have left in my room papers telling just how and why we died. At midnight these sheets will be distributed to all the newspapers of London, and tomorrow the world will ring with our heroic names. I will now put the motion. All in favor of this signify it by the usual uprising of the right hand."

The professor's own right hand was the only one that was raised.

"Now all of a contrary opinion," said the professor, and at once every hand to the audience went up.

"The noes have it," said the professor, but he did not seem to feel badly about it. "Gentlemen," he continued, "I see that you have guessed my second proposal, as I imagined you would, and though there will be no newspapers in London tomorrow to chronicle the fact, yet the newspapers of the rest of the world will tell of the destruction of this wicked city. I see by your looks that you are with me in this, my second proposal, which is the most striking thing ever planned, and is that we explode the whole of these pills in the basin. To make sure of this I have sent to an agent in Manchester the full account of how it was done, and the resolutions brought forward at this meeting, and which doubtless you will accept.

"Gentlemen, all in favor of the instant destruction of London signify it in the usual manner."

"Mr. Professor," said the man who had spoken previously, "before you put that resolution I would like to move an amendment. This is a very serious proposal, and should not be lightly undertaken. I move as an amendment, therefore, that we adjourn this meeting to our rooms at Soho, and do the exploding there. I have some little business that must be settled before this grand project is put in motion."

The professor then said: "Gentlemen, the amendment takes precedence. It is moved that this meeting be adjourned so that you may consider the project at your clubrooms in Soho."

"I second that amendment," said 15 of the audience, rising together to their feet.

"In the absence of the regular chairman," said the professor, "it is my duty to put the amendment. All in favor of the amendment signify it by raising the right hand."

Every hand was raised. "The amendment, gentlemen, is carried. I shall be only too pleased to meet you tomorrow night at your club, and I will bring with me a larger quantity of my explosive."

"John, kindly go round and tell the man to unlock the doors."

When Simkins and Slivers called round the next night at the regular meeting place of the anarchists they found no signs of a gathering, and never since the lecture has the Soho Anarchist league been known to hold a meeting. The club has mysteriously dissolved.

THE END.

Where Is the Literary Nobility?

At a banquet given by the Society of Authors to Walter Besant to compliment him on his knighthood, in reply to Hall Caine's remarks, Sir Besant said:

"If I were made a knight in recognition of my writings of mine, then I should have to look around and ask where are the men of higher rank? I should be very much honored indeed to being thought worthy of a knighthood in letters, but where, one would ask, can we find the baronets, the barons and the earls of letters? Where, for instance, is his grace the Duke of Boswell? Where is the Earl of Worcester? Where is the lord of the Heptarchy? Where is the lady of the Beleaguered City? Where is Lady Fauntleroy? Where is my Lady Lindsay? Where is the Earl of Man? Where is my Lord Thomas? Where is the Earl of Beaconsfield? Where was Sir Marmion of Saxon while he lived? The honor, sir, I must beg to insist upon, is in reality reflected upon this society itself. It is the virtual recognition of this society. It is, to use Lord Rosebery's own words, for 'services rendered to the dignity of literature.' And these services would be futile were it not for our own organization. Sir, we may be Radical or Tory or what we will, but let us remember that Lord Rosebery was the first prime minister who ever gave a thought to the dignity of literature—the first who ever recognized that literature is a profession at all."

A Pompeiian Bathroom.

The richest and most complete bath yet found in the ruins of Pompeii has recently been discovered. It is a large building, with sculptured basins, heating apparatus, lead pipes and bronze faucets. The walls and floor are tiled. Everything is in an admirable state of preservation, owing to the roof having remained intact when the city was buried in the year 79.

Amusement and Business!

WE should like to focus the opinion of Marion newspaper readers and get their view of much of the dry goods advertising. The variety of claims, the excessive boasting, the ill-founded assumption of superiority that is so thin than anybody can see through—these things must mix up a great deal of amusement with a business announcement.

We challenge a contradiction to the claim of good faith in all our advertising. The last dry goods house to be established, modestly begun in a small room, is today—by the verdict of Marion county's trading people—the first great store of Marion. Deception couldn't triumph like that.

WILLING TO ACCEPT.

Several Marion Republicans Have Papers Proving Their Willingness to Enter Public Service.

Marion Republicans have a touch of office-holding fever. Fortunately the disease is not fatal, and the patients generally recover.

It might not be in good taste to enter up a public list of the willing ones These lines are only to indicate a condition to exist. There are papers to prove the one willing to serve as clerk, that one (or ones, rather) as guard, and this one as police and so on through a list of minor state appointments. At Marion, Prospect, Caledonia and other sections of the county, are these candidates making themselves known.

In a local way the willingness is manifest. There are several willing to be deputy sheriffs, and quite as many anxious to assist Treasurer-elect Moore in handling county funds. Judged from a distance the sspectacle is interesting. Just how Dr. Hensley, Jake Moore and Joe Shaw look at it is not known, but they are indulgent and anxious to please.

HAND MASHED

A Wells-Fargo Employe Suffers a Painful Accident.

Burt Walsh, an employe of the Wells-Fargo Express company, met with an accident Thursday evening that will lay him up for some time. He was working at the transfer in West Marion, and was taking a truck out of the transfer house. On turning it his hand was caught between the handle of the truck and a box car.

The entire left hand was mashed. Two of the bones were broken and the flesh lacerated.

A DIVORCE GRANTED

IN THE SENSATIONAL ALLEN CASE AT PAULDING OHIO.

The Husband, C. H. Allen, Given a Decree and the Custody of the Children—The Verdict of the Court Is Generally Approved.

Today's Cincinnati Enquirer contains a special from Paulding, O., under date of November 14, which will be read with no little interest in this city. It is as follows:

"The sensational divorce trial in which C. H. Allen, president of the Paulding Deposit Bank, sought to be divorced from his wife, terminated here today in a complete victory for the banker. The co-respondent is Fred Cook, the well-known shortstop of the Findlay base ball club during the past two seasons. Mr. Allen is a brother of Bob Allen, the famous Philadelphia shortstop.

"The Allens were leaders in society until the wife's conduct caused society to ignore her, and she was compelled to withdraw from church and society. The evidence wrs overwhelming and disclosed the fact that the husband and friends of the family had found them in compromising positions repeatedly, and that young Cook had called the husband names in his own house on one occasion when Allen surprised the couple by entering the house through a rear door.

"Cook was a welcome guest at the Allen home from boyhood and a favorite companion of the husband, and through this friendship the intimacy sprang up. Public sentiment is entirely with the husband, and the verdict of the court granting him a divorce, the custody of the children and giving the wife only $500 alimony is generally approved. Allen is wealthy, aged 34 years, and his wife is two years his junior. She was Miss Lillie C. Hass, of Evansville, Ind., before marriage. Hon. F. B. Posey, of that city, prospective candidate for governor of Indiana on the republican ticket, represented her in court. Cook is 22 years old."

Everybody in Marion should see our black and colored Pique gloves, at one dollar. 307t2 D. A. Frank & Co.

MR. BENEDICT'S JOLLY.

It Was So Pronounced the Police Must Needs Take Care of Him.

Mr. Benedict, a monument dealer of Mt. Gilead, who formerly worked in this city, was in town Thursday afternoon. Benedict is pretty well known here. Thursday Mr. Benedict had the price with him and negotiated a jag. Early in the evening he started home, but turned back to get one more drink. While getting his last drink he met a number of convivial spirits who induced him to take a walk on the Bowery.

Benedict was not aware of the reputation of that locality and decided to go. He was just getting in good shape when the police found him and locked him up, and a charge of common drunkenness was placed against him. He remained in a cell until this morning when he was taken before 'Squire McKinley, who is acting mayor, gave him a fine of one dollar and costs. His money was all gone and he put up his watch, and getting his horse and buggy started for the Morrow county capital.

There is a suspicion that Benedict was touched for several dollars while on the Bowery. He had sufficient money to pay for what he bought and must have had a few dollars left when he started out with the last party of his friends, but when he was locked up he was "broke".

COMMON PLEAS COURT.

In the court of common pleas today Mary Shay, by her attorneys, S. and J. H. Bartram, filed an answer in the case of The Marion Building, Savings and Loan company against Mary Shay and others.

In her answer this defendant sets up her conveyance of the property sought to be sold under foreclosure of mortgage to Michael Shay, a part consideration named in which deed was the assumption by said grantees of the mortgage indebtedness due the plaintiff; that said condition has been broken and according to the contract made in said deed the land has reverted to her and she holds it only subject to said mortgage.

Wherefore she asks that she be paid the proceeds of the sale of said premises, all moneys over, and above the amount due on the mortgage of the plaintiff.

In the case of the Cleveland Stone company against Driver Bros. and others, in the court of common pleas, Fred Haberman, by his attorneys, J. F. McNeal & Sons, made a reply today, to the answer of William Cleveland, in which he denies each and every allegation in said answer not a mere denial of the averments of his cross-petition.
